

If you have taken a Linguistics course, or are currently enrolled in one, consider applying for:

The Grammie¹

1. n. origin obscure. Thought to be <gramm(ar) + ie (Sc. Diminutive suffix). An academic award, a monetary prize which recognizes the best undergraduate paper, project or essay in Linguistics at Illinois State University.

Eligibility:

The competition is open to juniors or seniors who have been enrolled in a Linguistics course during the academic year for which the award is to be given.

Submissions:

Students who wish to apply for the award should submit two typed (double spaced) copies of the work, each with a cover sheet which indicates the title of the work, the author's name (the work itself should not indicate the author's identity), university identification number, address, local phone number, email, major, and an indication of the class for which the work was originally written.

The evaluating committee values most highly papers which feature the use of primary Linguistic data (whether spoken data or textual) in the paper's argument.

These materials must be delivered to the English Department, 409 Stevenson Hall by April 1.
